Box 2.1 Natural resource management and environmental protection: use of remote sensing

India has made commendable advances in the use of remote sensing for natural resource management. The major achievements can be classified as follows:

Use of remote sensing in integrating environment and development at the policy planning and management levels: The country has an extensive and integrated institutional infrastructure and focussed programme elements to enable integration of environmental concerns in decision making. The main initiatives include:

National Natural Resource Management Systems: An integrated resource management system aimed at optimal utilisation of the country's natural resources through a systematic inventory of resource availability using remote sensing in conjunction with other techniques
Remote sensing for sound environmental management: Remote sensing is playing an important role in providing information on physical environmental parameters, such as land and climate, vegetation, soils, water, terrain and slope, land use, air and water pollution etc. Through the use of Geographical Information Systems, this information is integrated with relevant collateral information to evolve solutions to many environment issues. Notable achievements have been made in the area of regular forest cover mapping and monitoring as well as detection and monitoring of natural disasters along with assessment of the associated damages.

Role of remote sensing in strengthening the legal and regulatory framework for environmental protection

Remote sensing has established itself as an operational means to provide reliable information and benchmark survey mechanisms in the context of (i) making laws and regulations more effective (ii) establishing judicial and administrative procedures, (iii) providing legal reference and support services, (iv) developing effective national programmes for reviewing and enforcing compliance with national, state and local laws on environment and development. A number of case studies in the country demonstrate the application of remote sensing in this context- these cover forest encroachment studies, mapping of coastal regulation zones, enforcement of environmental legislation, environmental impact assessments, vegetation change detection studies and land use planning studies

Generation of natural resources information towards strengthening the national accounting system: Endeavors include the setting up of a National Spatial Data Infrastructure (to build a repository of natural resource information), National (Natural) Resources Information System (to provide integrated information on natural resources, socio-economic factors etc),

Groundwater Prospects Zone Mapping, Bio-resource Data Base, Wasteland Mapping, and the Integrated Mission for Sustainable Development. The IMSD project aimed at generating action plans to enhance the productivity and quality of natural resources. The project covered 85 million ha of problem lands falling in 175 districts in the country and has been successful in evolving action plans with community participation to address several issues including enriching groundwater potential and increasing cropping intensity.
