From: Aspiring Gothic Author
Subject: Opening to novel

Dear Editor

Below is the opening to my new novel. Please could you read and give me feedback on how successful it is as a gothic opening with some suggestions for how to improve it?

Thanks

The terrifying thunder pounded with an immense uproar as Faith drove her black Mercedes through the hammering rain. It bucketed eternally; the long winding roads began to flood as she travelled through the country, searching for a building to rest. The sky was as dark as death, with golden buttons gleaming alongside the silver-grey full moon. Its craters formed a fearful face; dark eyes and a long straight nose featured upon it. He carried a devilish smirk as if predicting a mysterious major event was about to occur. Misty fog filled the scene, it was a somewhat gothic atmosphere; giving her a sudden chill. Breaking to a halt, she spotted a rundown, derelict house that was of considerable size, with 4 tall stone towers. Black iron, decorative, spiral gates guarded this breath-taking house; Faith stepped out of her car, pacing up to the rusty gates, her brown leather jacket protecting ...
